

Instructions

In this exercise, we'll make our dgemm kernel work for arbitrary data types that support multiplication and addition by using templates.

The file `gemm.cu` contains a version of the matrix multiplication using shared memory. Use `template <typename T>` and replace all occurrences of `double` in the functions by `T`.

Change your data type from `double` to `float` in the main program. Does it get faster?